Assignments Matter Apr 30 2023 What exactly is an "assignment," and why does it matter? How can educators ensure that their teaching meets the rigorous demands of the Common Core State Standards, so that all students are well prepared for college or careers? Drawing from her extensive experience as a teacher coach, author Eleanor Dougherty answers these questions and many more, with two aims in mind: (1) to guide teachers and administrators in crafting high-quality assignments, and (2) to help educators understand the powerful impact that assignments can have on teaching and learning. The book explains the critical differences among "assignments," "activities," and "assessments" and thoroughly describes the key elements of an assignment: prompts, rubrics, products, and instructional plans. Readers will learn how to * Follow a seven-step process for crafting effective assignments; * Link assignments to units and courses; * Devise "Anchor" assignments for collaboration and consistency across grades; * Tap into instructional "touchstones" that can enrich any assignment; * Create classroom and school environments that support assignment-making; and * Use assignments as a source of data about teaching and learning. Equipped with the knowledge and expertise gained from Assignments Matter, readers will be able to create meaningful learning experiences for their students and come to appreciate the author's belief that "assignments may well be the missing link in school reform efforts to improve student achievement."

The Role of the Discussions in Student Learning in an Online Course May 19 2022 This qualitative multiple case study explored the role of the online discussions in student learning in three online graduate education courses. Three instructors and twenty-five students consented to observation of their discussions, coursework, assignment feedback and grades. To identify levels of group knowledge construction, discussions were coded using the Interaction Analysis Model (IAM) (Gunawardena, Lowe & Anderson, 1997). Instructors and students each completed an initial interview, a final interview, and an adapted Community of Inquiry (CoI) Survey (Arbaugh, Cleveland-Innes, Diaz, Garrison, Ice, Richardson & Swan, 2008). Content analysis of the discussions, assignments and interview transcripts was completed to provide context for the results of the IAM coding. All three instructors advocated a social constructivist perspective, and the design and facilitation of the three courses represented a range in implementation with graded or ungraded discussion assignments, individualized or whole class instructor facilitation, and course objectives related to individual growth in practice or knowledge of new content. Even with the value for social constructivism and this variety in instruction, the discussion posts across the three courses primarily demonstrated the lower IAM phases of sharing information and discovering dissonance. Students and instructors confirmed this characterization of the discussions and indicated that learning was more individual than social. Students shared three barriers to group knowledge construction in the discussions including: time constraints, the text-based nature of the discussions and the difficulty of developing trust in the cohort. Even with these obstacles to group knowledge construction, students frequently named the discussions as the strongest learning activity. The findings of this study contribute to a better understanding the students' experience of learning which can support the design of effective online instruction. In addition to considerations for design of discussion tasks, results suggest the need to scaffold the sometimes socially uncomfortable process of exploring dissonance and negotiating meaning. Appreciating students' perceived obstacles to collaborative learning in the online discussions can also inform design and facilitation of online courses.
